Journal section	Original article
Brief explanation of what is the original contribution and relevance of the work in the area	The COVID-19 pandemic caused the implementation of preventive quarantines and restrictions on people's freedoms, and also increased the population's mental problems, particularly anxiety, depression and stress, which led to countries such as Spain, USA or China to implement psychological intervention and first aid systems by telephone and through networks, being common the online administration of questionnaires as screening tools (https://gestioemocional.catsalut.cat as example in Spain), Unfortunately, there is not enough information to support the use of these online questionnaires. In this context, the objective of this work is to expand the research on the subject when the intervention is carried out online. TEIQue-SF, GADS, and DASS-21 questionnaires were administered online and data results analysed. Obtained results open a path for online interventions in this matter.
